

SENDING LOVING GIFTS TO THE BOYS IN FRANCE CALLS FOR EARLY CHRISTMAS SHOPPING AND A LARGE AMOUNT OF VERY CAREFUL SELECTION

NOW that the directions for sending the Christmas boxes to our men in France have arrived we will be doing at least a part of our Christmas shopping early this year. The boxes must be sent by November 1 and we are beginning to get the holiday spirit as we try to make the most appropriate selections. Really nothing is good enough for these men so bravely fighting for us, so it is going to take days of planning and wandering about for suggestions.

The space allotted is not large for there are many men on the other side who must be remembered, and the government has need of all the shipping space for supplies which must be sent. But the space is quite sufficient to send all sorts of loving remembrances which will be more appreciated this year than ever before in all their lives, not even excepting the years when, as youngsters, they aroused the sleeping family long before dawn with drum, horn and happy shouts over bulging stockings.

The mother's first thought is a little something to eat, for she well remembers the holiday appetite of this big man child of hers. Then, if the family is fortunate enough to have a grandmother who will insist on a bit of a space for a warm knitted garment, then there is the little sister's and brother's gift and dad's and no doubt a sentimental little "something" from the "girl back home."

Many Prominent Women Are Helping Nurse the Sick Throughout the City

TWO trained nurses are supervising the nursing at the Aoy school which has been turned into a temporary hospital for the care of the sick in the southern part of the city and they are being assisted by Mrs. Hugh S. White, Mrs. J. M. Goggin, Miss Martha Laver and a number of other prominent women. Miss Margaret LeBaron has charge of the diet kitchen with Miss Helen Hubbard Spiff, Miss Evelyn Boone, Miss Trotter and Miss Edwin as assistants.

Among the large number of women nursing in the hospitals and in the homes are: Mrs. T. M. Waller, Mrs. Dan T. White, Mrs. R. W. Worrell, Mrs. A. W. Foster, Mrs. R. E. Johnson, Mrs. J. P. Robertson, Mrs. Florence Miller, Mrs. Tom Slade, A. R. Apple, Mrs. V. A. Campo, Mrs. J. A. Corn, Miss Alice Fitzpatrick, Miss Eulalia Harper, Miss Nina Johnson, Miss Thelma Elmer, Miss Beulah Elmer, Miss Margaret Henneman, Miss Louise B. Cooper, Miss Edna Foster, Miss Maud Strickland and others.

Mrs. Julia A. Sharp is nursing in private homes.

There are 20 registrations for the classes in elementary hygiene and home care of the sick which will be instructed by Miss Jessie McDonald as soon as the influenza strikes. The number of pupils already registered will form two classes and those contemplating taking the course are asked to register as soon as possible in order that plans for the classes can be completed.

Struggle Between Her Appetites And War Stamps; the Stamps Win

Girl, Housekeeping For War Working Sisters, Tells of the Temptation of Money and How It Nearly Brought Her Disaster.

By HEATRICE FAIRFAX.

A GIRL has written me a letter that might be out of the pages of "Little Women," modernized and with a world war as a background.

And, like Louisa Alcott's delightful story, there are four sisters and a mother; four of them are doing war work for the red cross.

She goes to market, gets two meals, darns, mends and generally acts as lady's maid for the others. A husband comes in once a week to wash and iron, and there is a half day's sweeping and heavy cleaning done by someone else, but apart from this everything else about the little home is done by the girl who has written to me, and who feels that in running the flat well for the war workers she is doing her bit the same as if she occupied a desk in a government office.

My correspondent, whom I am going to call Martha, because she looks after the house, has an allowance from her war working family. It consists of her room, board and $4 a week apiece for each member of the household. This gives her about $6 a month as her very own, and is a handsome allowance for any girl.

It was this embarrassment of riches that got Martha into trouble during the first months of her experience as housekeeper. She spent over half a month's salary on a hat that "dazzled and shabbed" everything else in her wardrobe. The $12 hat made her good, honest blue serge seem cheap looking.

And she continued: "The high champagne colored boots completed my tragedy. I bought them expecting to step into happiness and found they were a little old fashioned, a little passé, that it was not quite the thing to wear boots so light or so high."

Her family, it appears from her account of them, must have been very sensible people, for she was expected to make fun of Martha for her foolish extravagance; they let her have her own head and depended on her native common sense to guide her in her salvation. They even borrowed the gorgeous hat occasionally when they were going out anywhere special, so that Martha was not without a hat.

Now called "The Hat," "No one calls it my any longer," Martha continues. "Every one now calls it 'the hat,' and says 'I'll take it if you haven't promised to lend it to someone else.' It looks like a dress and the plumed hat of a medieval knight and a melodrama."

When Martha, who is the youngest, was not buying sweeping and mending, she seems she was investing in ice cream sodas, sundae and candy. Life at this period was spelled in terms of an orgy, and yet the family patiently waited for her reform.

The war workers were all salting down thrift stamps, which they turned into war savings certificates, and later into Liberty bonds; only Martha's extravagance was a blot on the otherwise glorious record.

She made the awful discovery that she was getting fat—12 pounds of it—and that her complexion was getting spotty. In this connection, it seemed, had always been a thing of roses, leaves and lilies, a complexion to inspire a poet.

So the young prodigal took herself in hand. Why did she have to indulge in an ice cream soda every time she went downtown? The flesh she lost in walking she more than regained indulging herself in that adipose producing delicacy. Besides, and again Martha's conscience gnawed her, she was not laying by a single war stamp.

Instantly she had a collection of dainty handkerchiefs, empty candy boxes, spotted veils and a general accumulation of fluffiness.

One Saturday, which was domestic day, Martha bought her first war saving certificate. It seemed to work a miracle from the first moment of possession. Instead of the pang
